

Brother,

you were blue
when you entered the world like the faint backlight of the moon and I the sun—waited for your arrival.

I held you in my arms and you melted like raw honey sitting on the porch
at noon,
waiting six patient hours for an evening breeze.